BERGES FOR ALL WEAR,

Practicability and popularity seem for once to have joined hands in a substantial friendship over the question of serges and their uses. serges are being shown here more and more these late fall days. Plaid serges, checked serges, plain serges made up with silks, satins, chiffon, and tulle are displayed in the most exclusive shops for morning and af-ternoon wear, and even for informal evening affairs in the lighter colors. Whites and creams are the most popular colors, these two figuring largely at many of the smart functions in conjunction with brocaded satins and silks. Black and seal and also the attractive tete de negre own are much used for the stricttailor made suits Navy blue is he least popular of all the shades. t has been worn so much in the past t seems apparently to have outlived

RECIPES

PUMPKIN PICKLE

Three pounds of prepared pumpkin, four scant quarts of vinegar can be used a second time or for things afterwards). other pounds of sugar, a plnt and a half of water, the skin of half a lemon, one piece of bruised ginger, one piece of cinnamon, four cloves. (Put the lemon peel and spices in a bag or tie in rag.) First day: Peel the pumpkin and take out the seeds and all the soft, thready parts. Cut it into little strips, or with a vegetable cutter scoop out little round pieces. Cover the pieces, however shaped, with the vinegar, and let stand until the next day. Second day: Put the sugar and water together and cook or a little with the spices (in bag) In the meantime drain the pumpking from the vinegar and cook it in the sirup until it is as clear as possible. Take it out with a perforated spoon; then cook the slrup until thick, and when it is cool, pour it over the pumpkin, which has been packed in little glasses, without the spices. Cover each glass with white paper dipped in rum and seal.

The common, every day pickle is not put up in a thick sirup, and, for a time at least, this pickle will keep without being in any sirup in nice, crisp, dry slices, like candled fruit.

PRESERVED PUMPKIN

Allow one pound of loaf sugar to every pound of pumpkin, juice of two large lemons, peel of one. Pare off the rind and take out the seeds from a fresh pumpkin. Cut it into slices and put it into a deep ple dish with the sugar pounded and put between each layer. Squeeze the lemon juice from two large or three small lemons, strain it over the slices, and let them remain in it for two days. Then lew purple and black shades which put them in a preserving pan with a afternoon frocks in conjunction with pound and a half of crushed sugar, alks and satins and moire ribbons.
